"I Would Like to Exchange

These two pins for something different from your stock, if I may, as I ordered these from the Coast and they do not please me."

So spoke a lady some time ago and seemed greatly surprised that we did not at once comply with her wishes.

Needless to say that we were as greatly surprised at such a request. Doesn't the above illustrate just what has occurred to you over and over again? How often have you been entirely satisfied with the article ordered from away? Probably not often.

Now that conditions are the same here there would seem no further excuse for sending abroad for those things which can be purchased as well at home.

We don't want all the business, only a share of it; but when dividing it, let the home people have it.

You have noticed the very large stock of holiday goods in every department. If there ever was a time when we could cater to your wants, that time is now.

Our stock contains everything needful and useful, and if you cannot come to make a personal selection, we will gladly send you a large selection package, and as many as wanted until your wants are satisfied.

HE SAW THE PASSION PLAY

In the morning. Everything was clean and neat. The landlady and her little German maid were most attentive and very pleased when they could comprehend my German speech. There is a good deal of difference between Bavarian German and Hoch-Deutsch. However, as our principal conversation pertaining to food and refreshment generally, I had little difficulty in making myself understood. For however hating I may be in foreign tongues beyond that point I can always convey my desires in this broadening climate for all necessary sustenance. We dined at a table d'hôte at an inn in the center of the village, and a very good dinner we had every day.

After arranging these matters we sallied forth into the streets to reconnoitre our whereabouts. A performance was just over, and crowds were hurrying to the station. Our train had just brought a legion more, so the place was full of people, hosts of clerics, some in cassocks, some in semi-clerical, and others in rigorous clerical costume. The Lutheran clergy dress precisely as the Anglican, and were only distinguished by the language. The latter were abundant. They were mostly distinguished by their white bands edged with black. Then could be seen the Bavarian club costume, with the feather in the bonnet, and the forest green coat. Then every costume known to men on both sides of the Atlantic. Every one seemed in excellent humor, and all around were sounds of expectation for the events of tomorrow. Of course, we had some of our comical meetings even at Ober-Ammergau. We had no sooner seated ourselves at table than in walked our friends, the "Seavoyagers," Dr. Davenport, Mr. Bullen and his sister. They sat opposite to us, and a merry time we had. My nearest neighbor was a German gentleman, who told me that he was present by an extraordinary chance. He was in Berne. He had given up all intention of going to the presentation of the Passion Play, when he met a friend from Berlin who had influence enough to secure him tickets, lodgings, etc., at that late moment, and he was there. In course of conversation which became general Dr. Davenport said to a lady opposite to me: "I was Mrs. Bullen." The lady replied, "I was Mrs. Bullen." "Then I lived in your house nine years ago." Then introductions followed in which the name Honolulu occurred. My German friend immediately said: "The friend I spoke of to you who enabled me to come here is a resident of Honolulu. I wonder whether you know him. His name is Grinbaum." He was delighted when I told him that he had been a friend of mine for more than thirty years.

After a lovely night's rest we prepared to describe the Passion Play. It began at 8 o'clock. We were very fortunate in our seats. By exchanging tickets we were surrounded by all we knew. I had procured a copy of the words in German, and as the voices of the players were all singularly distinct I followed every word. I will not attempt to describe either the play or my feelings. The teaching, one could see, was intended to bring practically before the actual sight of the hearers the purpose of God to redeem lost mankind. The tableaux were illustrative of Old Testament scenes. The actual drama, if I may so speak, was life itself from the Gospels. The temptation and fall of Adam and Eve was depicted in the Garden of Eden. The sacrifice about to be made by Abraham, the appearance of the ram to take his place, Joseph rescued from the dungeon to sit at the right hand of the King, the huge bunch of grapes signifying the wine which Israel refused, though brought from the promised land—all these types of the atonement brought vividly before us, rejoiced us that they were so fully understood. The different scenes were described in verse by a chorus of men and women, led by a grand old choragus. They came in from both sides of the stage, and marched out in the same order. The whole performance used to take place in the open air; now the large theater seats 4,000 persons, and only the stage is in the open air. On the right was the Prætorium and on the left Pontius Pilate's house. The court yard of the Temple, where the Savior cast out the money changers, was depicted in the front of the stage. Golgotha and Calvary at the far back. The music was simple and very beautiful, fitting the words exactly. The tenderness of Mary Magdalene was very touching, and, if we may be allowed to criticize some of the others, we thought that the voice of Pilate did not suit his burly Roman appearance, though he made the scene of washing his hands of the blood of that Christ rather overdid his grief. The first part up to the condemnation of Christ lasted until 11:30. Then came an intermission until 1 o'clock, when the rest of the exciting drama was enacted—Alex. Mackintosh, in Anglican Church Chronicle for December.
